

The Lantern Workshop

Central idea and inference

READ OR LISTEN

Every autumn, Arjun's town held a lantern workshop. In previous years, the group used new plastic sheets for every design. This year, Nila suggested collecting clean, used paper and decorating it with vegetable-based colours. At first, some volunteers worried that recycled materials would look dull. During the workshop, children discovered that layered scraps created beautiful patterns. The finished lanterns were displayed along the market street. Visitors admired them, and the organisers decided to use reclaimed materials again next year.
